

Not your average...

Their first names might be common, but the exhibit

EXHIBIT

by MIT colleagues Joe Gibbons and Joe Zane is anything but — it's more like one of those annual MIT hacks. (See review in today's Living/Arts pages.) The zany installations in "Joe" (left) include a store-bought kit called "How to Become an Artist" still wrapped in plastic with a black beret, palette, and moustache. Check out the two framed drawings of the Joes placed side by side showing them glaring at each other. Get the picture? It's all about identity mixed in with anxieties about creativity and originality, according to an exhibit description. Wed-Sat 11 a.m.-5 p.m. (through Dec. 29; hours might vary, so call first). Free. Allston Skirt Gallery, 65 Thayer St., Boston 617-482-3652. allstonskirt.com [JW]

THURSDAY Dec. 20, 2007

The Boston Globe

boston.com/sidekick

Sidekick

Your Guide to a Better Day